US Presidential election: Why the Simpsons' vote counts

Homer Simpson has often been taken for a Republican but he is the kind of voter that is sometimes not sure whom to vote. The white, male, "donut"-obsessed father of three children pulled the lever for Barack Obama in the election in 2008, but this year, Homer has taken a different decision by voting for Mitt Romney. Homer explains that he doesn't like the Obamas anymore because of First Lady Michelle's anti-obesity campaign ("I already got one wife telling me to eat healthy"), so he goes for Mitt instead.

The voting machine then shows Romney's tax records and Homer finds out that the multi-millionaire Romney is paid a lot of taxes by the government. Homer thinks about telling the press, but the machine opens up and sucks him inside so that he is not able to do anything anymore. The Simpsons skit on Obama Romney is grand US sitcoms on politics and of the public makes clear Americans are liberal nor as the presidential election suggests.

Having the students recall full sentences using those numbers I found to be great language practice. I think this should be another great way for students to practice some of the vocabulary terms they heard or learned in the video. This specific activity is available when you download it directly from the Fluentize page. Again, you can find these post-viewing activities on the video quote, prepositions, numbers, and then the post-viewing conversation, along with the quiz / review activities when you download the lesson directly from the Fluentize page. I also realize that many English language teachers are teaching in an online environment. For those of you who have done this, I recommend trying out our interactive lesson plan, which are pretty much digital lesson plans that contain interactive fields for your students to write answers within. Also, when you do a Fluentize lesson online, we highly recommend using the platform Zoom and their remote control feature. The remote control feature allows students to take control of your screen during the lesson. You can do this by having your student request remote control of your screen, or you could also give control to the student. The reason this is so great is because it enables students to type answers in the interactive fields (download the 'Interactive Lesson' on the lesson page) of the lesson while you watch and help them with spelling and punctuation. I wish all you good health and hope you have a meaningful lesson exploring the US elections in detail with your students.
